FINAL TIPS

- Consider locations with a high concentration of potential members who might benefit from public speaking practice
- always tailoring your outreach to the unique needs and demographics of each potential location.

Key points to consider when choosing a location:

• Accessibility: Is the location easily accessible for potential members?
• Meeting space: Does the location have a suitable room for meetings?
• Cost: Is the cost of renting the space reasonable?
• Target audience: Does the location align with your desired member demographics?
• Community engagement: Can you promote the club through existing community networks?

Remember to always research local regulations and reach out to potential partners before launching your Toastmasters club at any location.
